For a time, this was the only school for deaf mutes in the country. After the question whether such persons could be furnished with a knowledge of written language, was satisfactorily settled, and the value of the system became apparent, similar institutions were put in operation in the middle, southern and western states, which now receive and educate the deaf mutes within their limits: leaving us a narrower field of usefulness, and sufficiently accounting for the fact that comparatively few of our recent pupils are from the more distant states.

The necessity of legislative assistance in extending the benefits of the Asylum to the deaf and dumb generally, very early prompted the directors and friends of the institution to efforts in order to secure so important a co-operation. In this benevolent enterprise, the legislature of Massachusetts took the lead, and has uniformly manifested a liberality and perseverance worthy of all praise. In 1819, provision was made for the support of twenty pupils, which was from time to time increased, until sufficient for the education of all the indigent deaf mutes within that state.

It should be mentioned, however, in this connection, that the legislature of Connecticut, in 1816, made a grant of five thousand dollars, to the funds of the Asylum, which was some years afterward appropriated to the education of pupils from this state. The example of Massachusetts was followed in 1822, by New Hampshire; in 1825, by Maine and Vermont; in 1828, by Connecticut; and in 1845, by Rhode Island. These states have continued their appropriations, and with increasing liberality, to the present time.

As there was no similar institution in the southern states, the directors, anxious to extend the benefits of this system of instruction as widely as possible, sent the principal of the Asylum, in 1834, with three pupils, to South Carolina and Georgia; in the hope that he might be able to awaken such an interest on the subject in the legislatures of those states, as would lead to a permanent provision for the instruction of their own deaf mutes. This effort resulted in legislative appropriations nearly or quite sufficient for the purpose, to be expended at this institution. And although a few have been received from each of those states, yet owing to the apathy of parents, and their unwillingness to send their children so far from home for so long a time, the expected advantage of this measure have not been fully realized. Each of these states has now a school for the deaf and dumb within its own limits.

The present pupils of the Asylum are comparatively younger than the former pupils. At the opening of the Asylum, there were many deaf and dumb persons of mature age anxious to avail themselves of the opportunity, for the first time offered them, of obtaining an education. At first, the beneficiaries of some of the states were required to be at least fourteen years of age when admitted. These causes, for a while, filled our classes with older pupils than could have been desired; although by the rules of the institution, only those under ten years of age were excluded. At present, the lower limit is fixed at eight years, which by many judicious teachers, is regarded as too young.

The average time of instruction of all who have left the Asylum is about four years. This is quite too short a period for the purpose of acquiring a common education;—such an education as will fit deaf mutes to read books easily, and to manage successfully the details of ordinary business. The patrons and friends of our pupils, as they have become better acquainted with the difficulties to be encountered, and more interested in the subject of deaf and dumb education, have manifested a willingness to extend, in compliance with the earnest wishes of the officers of the Asylum, the time of their pupilage; so that five years may now be regarded as the average term of instruction. It is hoped that the time is not distant when the opportunity of remaining at least seven years, shall be afforded to all.

The cause of deafness has always been a subject of much interest to those engaged in the care and instruction of deaf mutes. It has, in this institution, been made a matter of distinct inquiry in every case; but owing to the negligence of friends in some cases, and their ignorance in others, we have been unable to ascertain the cause in fifty-six instances. We cannot speak with entire certainty in regard to all the causes assigned, or supposed to be known. It not unfrequently happens that the parents themselves are entirely unconscious of the misfortune of their deaf children, until they arrive at the age of two or three years; and are then led to suspect that they may be deaf by their not learning to speak. Having ascertained the fact of their deafness, they then inquire as to the cause, and in many cases form their conclusions upon very slight grounds. If there had been sickness in infancy, that is often regarded as the cause, whatever its nature may have been, or however unlikely to produce such a result. In some cases, where there had been local inflammation, without severe sickness, and even ulceration in the ears, parents decide that the deafness is congenital; not supposing that local disease of so mild a character could produce such an effect. It has been our aim carefully to examine the evidence in these doubtful cases, and come to such conclusions as the facts would warrant. The result of our investigations is contained in the foregoing table. From this it appears that in a little more than half of the ascertained cases, deafness was congenital. We are aware that doubts have been expressed by medical and scientific men, whether deafness is ever in any case congenital. But these doubts are strengthened neither by analogy nor facts. Children, in many instances, are born blind, and no reason can be assigned why the eye should be diseased anterior to birth, or subject to malformation, rather than the ear. Besides, examinations made after death, both in this country and in Europe, have furnished clear evidence on the one hand of such deviation from the normal structure, as to render hearing impossible; and on the other, of such apparent perfection of all the parts of the ear, as not to be distinguished from others capable of performing their appropriate functions.

The diseases assigned in the table, as causes of deafness, although differing in many respects from one another, probably occasion this calamity in one uniform way; that is, by inflammation. Some of them produce this effect in the fauces or throat, followed by ulcers, in the healing of which, the eustachian tubes are closed, and deafness ensues. Others produce inflammation in the internal cavities of the ear, which destroys the organs of hearing, by suppuration; or in that part of the brain with which the auditory nerves are connected, incapacitating it for receiving impressions from sounds in the usual way.

Most of the one hundred and eight who are said to have lost their hearing by disease not specified, might have been distributed under some of the other heads; but their friends could give no other information respecting the cause than that assigned. Next to this, the most common causes of deafness are spotted fever and scarlet fever. The former of these diseases, however, has nearly ceased to be a cause.

Most of the pupils who lost their hearing before five years of age, had lost nearly or quite all knowledge of articulation before coming to the Asylum, even when pains had been taken, on the part of friends, to preserve it. Many of those who could articulate to some extent, were very unwilling to practice it; preferring the language of signs, although imperfectly understood by others, as a medium of communication. In these cases, it has been our aim not only to secure to them what knowledge of articulation they brought with them, but to perfect and extend it as far as possible, without interfering with our more appropriate work of intellectual and moral education.

The number of those who have been pupils of the Asylum, now known to us as married, is 252. Of these, 61 have partners who can hear and speak; while the remaining 96 have married among themselves, or other deaf mutes.

The question is often asked, whether we believe deafness to be hereditary. The facts which we have collected and embodied in this report, lead to the opinion that it is hereditary in the same sense that insanity, scrofula and consumption are hereditary. To use a common expression, it runs in families; sometimes affecting all the children, sometimes every other child, and sometimes only those of one sex. In only a few instances have we known it transmitted by parents to their children, and in only three instances, through three successive generations. Of the 144 families formed of our pupils who have married, there are deaf and dumb children in only five of them, while in other families of six or eight children each, all can hear and speak.

In conclusion of what we have to say on this head, we would remark, that while it would not be a matter of surprise if persons afflicted with congenital deafness should have deaf and dumb children, still it is far more probable that their children would hear and speak.

The number of deaths which have occurred among all those who have been pupils at the Asylum so far as known to us, is 180; namely, 63 males and 67 females. Of these, 31 died at the Asylum; namely, 13 males and 18 females.
